

GRAIN AND PRODUCE MARKET

Wheat Goes Down, but Turns in War Predict an Impending Bull Movement.

BULLS STICK TO CORN MARKET

OMAHA, March 22, 1915. The bears in wheat are more or less discouraged because of the poor success of the allies in penetrating the Dardanelles straits and permitting the Russian wheat to come out through these waters to the importing countries abroad. The sinking of English and French battleships in the straits by Turkey shows that it is likely to be some time before any grain will be sent out of Russia.

Indian and Argentine soldiers of wheat are asking higher prices for their grain, and in addition to this as a drawback, there is more or less hesitation in making shipments from the southern hemisphere at the present time.

The bull movement in wheat is among the probabilities. The open interest in May at Chicago is larger than most previous years, and it is likely that there will be some time before any grain will be sent out of Russia.

There are two factions in the corn market, the present time, and they both seem to be quite strong in their convictions. Those who have advanced
